

Ramblings of the Rambler

The Rambler walked into a Medford barber shop the other day, seated himself in an elevated chair, and felt almost important as the colored gent rolled up his trousers and commenced to put a Medford polish on a pair of shoes bought at the Peerless several months before. Then a traveling man entered the shop, and accosted the knight of the razor in a friendly fashion.

"Yes, I just got back from a trip down the line," the man with the grip replied. "And they are sure doing things at Grants Pass; that sugar factory is being built all right, and it is a whole of an institution."

"Medford is going to have a factory next year," said the k. of the r. as he clipped a mole off the traveling man's chin, and it's going to be bigger than the one at the 'Pass' you can bet."

"The Twohys are pushing right ahead with their railroad down at Grants Pass, and will have a big gang of men on the job within a few days," remarked the t. m. as he felt the life blood flow from the spot that had once been the location of a mole that he had nourished from childhood.

"We will have a new railroad from Medford before long, and it will run right through the hills and down the Klamath river to the coast. It will keep some men busy building that when we get the city bonded and the rest of the cash raised," said the whisker artist.

"The hotels down at Grants Pass are crowded to the roofs with mining men and other investors, and there is great mining activity," rejoined the traveling man.

"Out here at the Blue Ledge we Medford people—say, mister, what do you suppose would be the chance of getting a job in one of the barber shops down at Grants Pass? Believe I'll take a run down the first of the week and feel around a little," and the barber gave a final pat of the hair and called out "next."

Coming up Sixth street toward the county capital building the other morning, the Rambler saw the figure of the recently appointed local Nasby hot-footing it up the street. There was a look of agony on the p. m.'s face, as though he had just heard by wireless that Woodrow had again changed his mind.

"Say, can anyone but republicans sign a republican's nominating petition?" inquired the p. m. "I signed one last night, and I have been wondering since what it has done to me."

When informed that he had signed a document in which he had vouched for his simon-pure republicanism, the Wilson appointee gave all the outward indications of a stroke of apoplexy. "I was never a better democrat in my life than I am right now. I am going down and have 'Gene get my name off that thing this minute.'" And the p. m. continued his race for the court house.

Now put away those knives, razors and scissors, use 'Gets-It' and you'll have a sweeter disposition and no more corns and calluses.

NAVAL LIEUTENANT
SUICIDE AT BREMERTON
Puget Sound Navy Yards, Bremerton, Wash., Mar. 25.—Whether "too much orient" or entanglements outside of the service influenced young Lieutenant Ormonde C. Pallthorpe to step into his room aboard the U. S. cruiser Saratoga, close the door and send a bullet through his heart late yesterday, is the problem that is puzzling officers and men at the Puget Sound Navy yard today. No reason for suicide could be found by the board of inquest appointed by Commandant-Captain Coonts.

Officers opened the door and saw Pallthorpe lying dead on the floor. His pistol, with one chamber empty, was lying a foot from his body.
Brother officers maintained that the reason for the suicide will have to be sought outside of Pallthorpe's naval record, his work and his small circle of friends. He graduated from the naval academy at Annapolis in 1910.
